Dear The Federal Communications Commission,

I have just herd of your contemplation on the idea of changing the burden of the USF from long distance users to local callers. I strongly urge you to not go forward with this action for it would cause more people to loose more money and this would cause more people to use other things such as e-mail or just plain old letters to communicate which would cause you to continually shift the burden of the USF to different people and this would solve nothing. It would cause usless effort that would be better spent else were. Again I strongly urge you to stop this useless idea and return to more pressing matters. I am truely saddend that you would even think of this as a solution to what ever your trying to solve.

Sincerely,

Marcus Puckett
